Description:

This L-shaped log house is a two story, four bay structure covered with vinyl siding. A notable character-defining feature is the fancy cast iron one-bay entrance porch which probably dates from the third quarter of the 19th century. There is also an iron fence along the front of the property. Windows have single pane sash which replace the originals. The main entrance is located in the third bay from the east end of the house and includes a narrow transom. The extension to the rear apparently had a two story porch along its east side which has now been enclosed.

This like many of the early 19th century houses along Baltimore Street reflect Funkstown's growth and development fostered by the National Pike. According to the 1877 Atlas for Funkstown, this house was the property of F. Knode.
